1. A man is put in a taxi. He's clearly faking his wound. Peter Beaumont of the Guardian describes him as one of two men who survived the second explosion. He is either twenty-one-year Mohammed Abu Watfah or "a skinny man in his thirties."
2. The Hamas commander in the purple shirt holds open the taxi door. A few seconds earlier, he had gotten out of the way of the hotel staffer carrying the uninjured man and walked behind them.
3. Journalists and hotel staff tend to two boys said to be wounded. Photos show that there were actually four boys, not two, and Motassem Bakr was faking his injuries. There are no photos or video of the second wounded man.
4. The site where NBC News reporter Ayman Mohyeldin said he kicked a soccer ball with the four children who were killed.
5. The route taken by three boys and one man who survived a second explosion (red line). They arrived uninjured at the al-Deira Hotel, though journalists claim they were all wounded.
6. The trajectory of the Israeli naval shell (yellow line) that the French film crew said struck the Hamas police post on the breakwater.
7. The site of the second explosion, which all four runners survived, according to Peter Beaumont. Other witnesses said only three were running, and all were killed.
8. The site of the second explosion, as filmed by the French news crew. News reports and witnesses claim that this explosion killed either three or four boys.
9. The site where the French news crew filmed three boys running lackadaisically, one wearing a green shirt, one a red, and one a white.

10. The site where the three boys in the green, red, and white shirts were photographed running, possibly the day before, wearing the same clothes that they had on when they died.

11. The site where the mutilated bodies of three boys were videotaped and photographed. One wore a green shirt, one a red, and one a white. These three boys were killed at an unknown time and place, and their bodies were later put on the beach by Hamas.

12. The Hamas commander in the purple shirt.

13. The route that paramedics took to transport two dead boys on one stretcher to an ambulance (purple line).

14. The site where an ambulance parked and took the corpses of two boys, both of them carried on one stretcher.

15. The route taken by the ABC News crew (green line). Headed by reporter Alex Marquardt, these journalists were the first on the scene. They ran right past the site where the three bodies were later filmed; at that time, there were no dead boys lying in the sand.

16. The site of the second explosion, as depicted in the faked photos of the four children running.

17. The site where a second ambulance was parked. It then backed up several yards-meters to receive one dead boy and one wounded man.

18. The route that the paramedics took from the second ambulance to the beach (aqua line). After running to the beach, the paramedics came back to the ambulance, guided by two Hamas terrorists and accompanied by the Hamas commander.

19. The route of the man carrying the dead boy in the green shirt to the ambulance parked on the street (orange line). A Hamas terrorist took the boy and loaded him into the ambulance, where they were joined by the commander. Another Hamas terrorist carried a wounded man to the ambulance by this route.

20. The Hamas commander in the purple shirt. He sat in the ambulance as it backed down the street from in front of the Beach Hotel.

21. The trajectory of the Israeli missile used to destroy the Hamas police post on the breakwater (white line).

22. The site where al-Jazeera reporter Stefanie Dekker photographed the four boys who ran to the al-Deira Hotel immediately after the Israeli strike on the Hamas police post. Two boys wore blue shirts, and two wore green.

23. The route taken by paramedics carrying the body of the child killed in the police post (mid-blue line).

24. The Hamas commander in the purple shirt.

25. The site of the third ambulance. It took away the body of the child killed in the police post.
